ABSTRACT

[0076]   A method of configuring a mobile device in a mobile communications network comprises determining whether a first identity module coupled to a mobile device is different from a second identity module previously coupled to the mobile device; searching entries in a data structure for first configuration data associated with the first identity module; and configuring the mobile device to use the first configuration data.